This Is The Way It Was

This monthly photo column by Ken Murdock features railroad scenes of the past, a look back into railroading's history.

Winter Park is getting its fourth depot this year and most of us don't remember its first or second ones. This circa, 1935 photo shows their second depot, built by the ACL and located on the east side of the tracks where Morse Boulevard crosses today. The depot was accessed via a bricked cul-de-sac off of Park Avenue. - Barriger Library collection

ACL's purple and silver E7A #529, only a year and a half old, with a south bound train, probably the West Coast Champion, has made a stop at Winter Park's second depot on January 8, 1947. - Richard Kearns collection

ACL's E7A #511 north bound has made a station stop in Winter Park on August 11, 1960 with a train that is probably the West Coast Champion. The roof of the depot can be seen over the top of the train. Still in purple and silver, the black and yellow paint scheme had been introduced in September 1957 and can be seen on the RPO car following the locomotives. - Conniff/Richard Kearns collection

March 2014 Museum Report

By Ken Murdock, Museum Curator

March wasn't quite as productive as January or February due to combining the monthly museum workday with the quarterly board meeting. I do this often to reduce the number of trips required by our members during the month, especially those working on inventory. Typically, after a quarterly board meeting we have a house cleaning session, taking care of vacuuming, emptying trash cans, cleaning the restroom and etc. This is the minimum, but it holds us until the following month.

I did expand the March workday, however, to more than just after the board meeting. I opened it up for all who wanted to come out at 8:30 AM and work on things while the board was conducting its business. I had two, Allen Quinn and Al Sharp, who chose to do just that. Since the weather was perfect, Allen brought his sand blaster and finished blasting and painting the caboose stove. It is really looking great! Al worked in the library, cleaning out the cabinets and countertop in our snack bar area. We now have regained our countertop for our refreshment time and some extra space in the cabinets. Thanks to both of you for your dedication to our organization.

We also had four Wednesday inventory workdays during the month with Al Sharp, Roger Wilson, Jerry and Ginger Honeter and me participating. Irv Lipscomb also came out on several Thursdays during the month and continued his photography work for our inventory. The pace has slowed a bit on inventorying additional items, because we have been concentrating on items already inventoried, checking for mistakes and for items not yet photographed or items missed in showcases that have been mostly completed. Mike Ryan has been busy at home scanning photos and cleaning them up before putting them on CDs.

Jerry has continued pulling duplicate books from the shelves and will meet with the library committee soon to determine the value of each and best way to dispose of them. We will probably offer them to our members first, then place them in our gift shop, or on eBay, or donate them to a school library. Ginger continued with her silver cleaning job and is keeping everything sparkling, the way the railroad dining car personnel once did.

Thank you to each of you who participated in workdays or hosting or both. We couldn't keep our museum open without you. Please don't forget to log in your volunteer hours including travel time and lunch time.

Winter Park's Station Dedication

By Ken Murdock

On Monday, March 03, 2014, at 10:30 A.M., Winter Park held their formal dedication and ribbon cutting for their new Amtrak/SunRail station. A SunRail train was brought to the station for the ceremony. About fifteen minutes prior to the start of the ceremony, Amtrak's south bound Silver Star made a station stop. This presented a great photo opportunity with SunRail and Amtrak both in the station at the same time. The Silver Star had to make two stops due to the platform not being open on the south side of Morse Blvd. The first stop put the Amtrak and Sun-Rail locomotives almost nose to nose, but on adjacent tracks. The second stop put the Amtrak locomotive and the SunRail cab control car almost side by side.

The station wasn't 100% completed for the ceremony. There were many exterior details yet to be done and Amtrak hadn't moved in, but the interior looked completed and was very, very nice. The interior material selections were very upscale and durable. The floor is ceramic tile and the agents counter is granite. The ceiling in the waiting room is very high, sloping with the roof pitch, thus giving it a spacious feeling. The old station, with boarding canopy removed, remains fully operational, but if you want to get a few last photos of it, you had better hurry. It will be demolished very soon.

Guest speakers for the ceremony, who thankfully, kept their remarks brief, included, Randy Knight, Winter Park City Manager; Ken Bradley, Winter Park Mayor; Teresa Jacobs, Orange County Mayor; Tom Kirk, General Superintendent, Amtrak Southern Division; Frank O'Dea, Florida DOT District 5; and John Mica, U.S. Congressman, 7th district. Congressman Mica has done more than anyone else to get the funding and to promote this project, which has now become a reality.

The crowd at the ceremony was larger than expected, probably in the range of 300 to 400. A three piece orchestra provided music before and after the ceremony. After the ceremony and ribbon cutting, the station and train were both opened for everyone to tour. No, regrettably, the locomotive wasn't included in the tour. Lemonade and cookies were served and SunRail passes were on sale.

Our former member, Kevin Sweat, was the engineer who brought the display train down from Sanford. Kevin was hired early by Bombardier as an engineer and has been training other new hires as they prepare for their start up in mid-April. Kevin said they are hiring engineers from many main line and short line railroads, one coming from Alaska. In 2013, Bombardier won a 10-year $195 million contract to operate and maintain SunRail including dispatching. Bombardier also handles operations and maintenance for the Tri-Rail system in South Florida.

Kevin also said that SunRail will charter one of their trains for private excursions. With tables between most seats, we could check into the possibility of chartering a train for a catered banquet, depending, of course, on the price. Kevin also said FDOT, who now owns the tracks, will permit privately owned equipment to operate over their line as long as it meets FRA regulations and SunRail's insurance requirements. Insurance could kill it, but can you imagine seeing the Orange Blossom Cannon Ball running down this double track main line on a weekend!!

You will be able to buy a one-time fare or reusable, reloadable plastic SunCards. SunRail will be free April 15-18 and April 21–25 to encourage people to try it and hopefully, become regular riders. You can't beat that price, so go out and give it a try!

SunRail's Locomotives

SunRail will have 7 locomotives, numbered 100 thru 106, when delivery of phase one is completed. The locomotives are MP32PH-Qs built for SunRail by Motive Power, Inc., a Wabtec company based in Boise, Idaho. SunRail's units were built to similar specifications of MPI's new MPXpress cowl units, except they are remanufactured units that had previously operated on MARC as GP40WH-2 locomotives. Inside the locomotive, the 3000 H.P. EMD 16-645 prime movers have been completely rebuilt and electronics have been upgraded using the same equipment as that on their new MPXpress locomotives. The main difference is on the outside where the MP32PH-Q units retain the hood unit layout of the MARC GP40WH-2s, but have the new MPXpress aerodynamic, wide cabs.

Kevin said these locomotives have plenty of power, accelerating their train to 79 MPH within a mile and braking is excellent as well. The disc brakes on the passenger cars probably contribute to this, plus dynamic braking on the locomotive. He said they only have two stretches of track where they can run a 79 MPH. There will be 12 station stops in phase 1 and many, many grade crossings.

SunRail's train was on display at Winter Park's new Amtrak/SunRail station dedication ceremony with its remanufactured MP32PH-Q locomotive #100. Engineer Kevin Sweat is seen climbing aboard.

SunRail's display train at Winter Park's new depot dedication had two coaches, the last one being a cab control car. SunRail's standard seems to be the cab control car in the lead south bound and the locomotive in the lead north bound.

Amtrak's south bound Silver Star made a station stop just before the ceremony bring the nose of their lead locomotive #159 almost nose to nose with SunRail's #100.

The Silver Star had to make a second station stop, due to platforms south of Morse Blvd not being open, thus bringing their lead locomotive #159 right alongside of SunRail cab control car #2003.

The Silver Star departs Winter Park for Orlando with a Heritage baggage car on the rear behind a Viewliner sleeper. No class!

A large crowd had gathered for the ceremony. The speaker's podium was located between the center set of columns on the left (third space from the far end), almost not visible from this angle.

Congressman John Mica, 7th Congressional District of Florida, is between the center set of columns to the left, addressing the crowd. He seemed almost relieved that this long fought for project was finally becoming a reality.

This is another view of the crowd with the speaker on the right between the columns under the half round window in the gable end. Kevin Sweat can be seen standing on the locomotive, watching the ceremony.

St. Marys Railroad Lives on in Georgia

By Jim Wrinn
Thursday, March 2, 0 2014

It's the time of year when I start thinking about getting out more often and exploring railroads across America. At Trains, we just finished our annual tourist railroads and railroad museums issue and got it back from the printer. You'll see the May issue with Southern Railway 4501 on the cover in your mailboxes and on newsstands soon. I've been fortunate to visit many preservation railroads and museums in my time, but a few have evaded me. One of the railroads that I haven't reached is the St. Marys Railroad in coastal Georgia. I always knew it as a heavy-duty paper mill road, but a few years back, the mill shut down, and the railroad struck out on its own. Today that means both freight and tourists.

The railroad's Barbara Ryan asked me if Trains could prepare a story about their line. We'll start working on that, but since it may be a while before it gets to print, I asked if we could play 10 questions, so she and General Manager Paul Pleasant were kind enough to do so. Here's what they told us about their railroad.

What's the power and the rolling stock?

GP16 No. 507, SW1200RS No. 506, cabooses X395, 671, and three 65-foot container cars converted to open air excursion cars, Nos. 1001, 1002, and 1003.

When does the railroad run?

Freight trains run as needed. Themed excursions run on Saturdays throughout the year. The schedule changes by the seasons.

What's the history on this line?

The St. Marys & Kingsland started in 1865. The first two locomotives arrived by barge to open the 10-mile line from St. Marys to a connection with what became the Seaboard Air Line at Kingsland, Ga. The railroad went by a variety of names and had many owners as its fortunes ebbed and flowed. Its sale to Gilman Paper in 1939 created the St. Marys Railroad. The short line grew in 1955 with an extension to a U.S. Army ammunition storage base. The railroad planned a 20-mile extension to Folkston, Ga., to reach the Atlantic Coast Line, but the 1967 Seaboard Coast Line merger made that a moot point. The railroad became a part of Gilman Paper in 1999, then went to Durango Paper, which closed in 2002. In 2007, Boatright Cos. bought the railroad.

What are the biggest challenges in bringing the railroad back as a viable freight carrier and as a new tourist line?

On the freight side, trucking is our major obstacle. With our biggest customer (Georgia-Pacific) it's not so much a question of freight rates but delivery time. We're having a difficult time competing with that. For the excursion train it's determining market appeal. So far, every excursion has sold out.

Do you use volunteers or paid train crews?

The engineers, conductors, and trainmen are professionals, and volunteers serve as entertainers and car hosts.

What's your annual ridership?

15,000

What freight traffic do you have on the railroad?

Paper products, polyurethane pellets, military supplies for Kings Bay submarine base, and other bulk commodities.

How many carloads does the railroad carry per year?

Carloads vary between 600 and 1000. We also have storage for up to 500 cars and average 80 percent of capacity.

Where do your riders come from?

Mostly from a 100 mile radius with the bonus of additional people from across the country who come to the area for vacation.

What three things do you want to see the railroad accomplish in the next 3-5 years?

Increase our freight business utilizing vacant properties and existing industry adjacent to the railroad. Increase number of excursions so as to attract larger groups. Do a Day Out with Thomas event.
